

Juvenile Rights in the Detention Facility

This pamphlet explains most of the rights juveniles have within the Detention Facility. The Detention Facility does not allow juveniles to be treated in a punitive demeaning manner. This includes but is not limited to: verbal, mental, physical abuse; humiliation; the use of corporal punishment; withholding food, sleep, medical care or mental health access. All youth have the right to a grievance procedure without fear of reprisal or retaliation.

Deschutes County Detention Facility Philosophy

The Deschutes County Detention Facility operates under a restorative justice philosophy, which emphasizes the repair of harm through a cooperative process. This includes the transformation of people, relationships, and communities affected by juvenile crime by addressing public safety, providing services to youth and families, and supporting the needs of victims. Under the restorative justice philosophy, youth detained in the Detention Facility receive services that address their thinking and behavior that lead to their criminal involvement. This ensures that when youth leave the Detention Facility, they are better equipped with knowledge and skills to promote healthy decision-making.

Initial Court Process

The initial court process is the Arraignment or a Preliminary Hearing. This is the first hearing a youth receives after they have been lodged in Detention Facility. The hearing occurs within 24-36 hours, excluding weekends and holidays. The youth is officially charged with the specific crime at the hearing (the Probation Violation or the Conditional Release Violation that was the reason the youth is sent to detention). He/she will be asked if they require representation of an attorney, a staff member from the JCJ Court Team will accompany the youth. Recommendations regarding remand to detention or release will be made to the court at this time. The Juvenile Referee or Circuit Court Judge will make decision based on charges, supervision needs, necessary youth evaluation and available release options for the youth.

Conditional Release: If the youth is released, he/she will be required to sign a document agreeing to strict conditions they must follow in order to remain in the community. The youth will complete the document in or after court with the assistance of a Probation Officer.

Remanded to Detention: If the youth is remanded to detention by the court, he/she will have a Detention Review Hearing every 10 judicial days (excludes weekends and holidays). As required by ORS statute, the Referee or Judge will track youth progress and possibilities for release will be considered.
